

I am writing to support Indiana's Telephone Privacy Act. The FCC should not implement a proposal to lessen the effects of the law. I am registered on a "no-call" list for Indiana, and it has greatly reduced the number of unsolicited calls I receive. In the past I would receive up to 4 calls per evening plus 2-3 calls during the day. I have received 2 unsolicited calls since being on the list in April. I can spend time talking to family and friends without a call-waiting interruption from a telemarketer. The Indiana law allows solicitations from some groups who may legitimately need to reach me. No FCC proposal should interfere with the state law.
